2. In founding the Charles W. Eliot II Scholarship, MAPC recognizes high school seniors who are entering their first year of college and who are especially interested in pursuing an academic career in land use planning that will guide our society to a more sustainable future. MAPC broadly defines land use planning to include housing and economic development, transportation, environmental protection, energy conservation, and impacts on public health – all of which relate to improving our “living environment.” Local or regional experience that shows how the student making application sees his/her community in the present or vision of the future would be helpful. Students making application for this scholarship should write below how their proposed academic program and/or future career goals will address one or more of these subjects (use other pages if necessary):

4. Name and address of the institution of higher education that you plan to attend next year:

5 Also please list three teachers or other adult leaders who know of your interest in the field of planning that was so important to Mr. Eliot.

I have read the brief summary of Charles W. Eliot II and believe that my work and interest will help to advance his ideas.

In Memory of

Charles W. Eliot II

1899 - 1993

“Planning is the guidance of change,” Charles Eliot II noted in his “Thoughts on Planning” essay written after some 50 years of practice and teaching. Indeed Charles Eliot made notable achievements in the evolution, advocacy and implementation of planning concepts, as did three generations of Charles Eliot’s before him.

Mr. Eliot was a “founding father” of the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC), the regional planning agency for metropolitan Boston. We have long benefited from Mr. Eliot’s pioneering efforts in regional planning. His work with the Council began at the first meeting on January 14, 1964 and continued for three decades. During those years Mr. Eliot was an outspoken defender of regional planning and the preservation of open space. Longtime members of the MAPC organizational family recall his annual submittal of legislation for the regionalization of government. His role on the national front included setting up state planning agencies throughout the country, as director of the National Resources and Planning Board. On the local front he created plans for Arlington, Bedford, Duxbury and Yarmouth. For the Commonwealth, he masterminded the green belt area around Boston and the Bay Circuit. His work has gone a long way to advance sound planning practices and the conservation of natural resources.

At MAPC, Mr. Eliot is most remembered for his participation in drafting the original legislation that created MAPC. During his years at the Council, Mr. Eliot served as a member of the Open Space and Recreation Technical Advisory Committee, and on the Regional Organizational Technical Advisory Committee developed to explore inter-municipal cooperation. He held a gubernatorial seat on the Executive Committee for 12 years. In the 1970’s MAPC and the Society of Planning Officials recognized Mr. Eliot for his outstanding contribution to the advancement of planning. He was the first and only recipient of MAPC’s Atherton Loring Award.

Mr. Eliot was at the vanguard of regional planning for more than half a century. He leaves a great legacy for the Commonwealth and the nation that will not soon be forgotten. We need only look around to see the benefits of his work.
